Dear Deputy Daly,

The Health Service Executive has been requested to reply directly to you in the context of the above Parliamentary Question, which you submitted to the Minister for Health for response. I have examined the matter and the following outlines the position.

Prior to the COVID 19 pandemic, the HSE were exploring options in relation to telemedicine, in response to a European wide shortage of CAMHS Consultants, and a number of longstanding Consultant vacancies in CAMHS teams across the country. During the pandemic, in line with international best practice, the use of telemedicine was rolled out to both CAMHS and adult community mental health teams.

The MHID CAMHS team in Cork introduced telemedicine in 2019 to reduce the need for children with mental health and intellectual disability to travel to clinics, and allow for assessment in their own home, or in the school they attend. This was a very welcome development for families, a number of whom reported the travel to regular clinic appointments as extremely challenging for these young people and their families.

As part of the response to ongoing Consultant vacancy in Kerry CAMHS, and in line with recommendation 18 of the Maskey report, a very successful telemedicine clinic was established in January 2022.

All children and families are given a choice as to whether they are happy to participate in a telemedicine clinic and are asked prior to the appointments to give their consent. The team have a standardised operating policy in place to ensure that the tele medicine clinics operate in a clinically safe and effective manner. A professionally trained member of the CAMHS team is present in the room at the team base in Kerry with the child and parents throughout the consultation and feedback to date from young people and their parents has been positive.

The service is now established for 6 months and the team plan to evaluate the use of telemedicine in the coming weeks. The outcome of this pilot will help inform the development of this service further.

I trust this information is of assistance to you.

Yours sincerely,
