Dear Deputy Stanley,

The Health Service Executive has been requested to reply directly to you in the context of the above Parliamentary Question, which you submitted to the Minister for Health for response. I have examined the matter and the following outlines the position.

When people are experiencing a mental health crisis, they will often attend Emergency Departments (EDs) to access mental healthcare. While individuals are in some cases appropriately seen in an ED setting, it can be a challenging environment for people with mental health difficulties. As a result, the HSE has prioritised the development of alternative treatment pathways, as well as service improvements in ED settings. This has involved the rollout of the National Clinical Programme for Self-Harm and Suicide Related Ideation (NCPSHI), liaison mental health services, the development of crisis resolution services in the community, enhancement of digital mental health supports and the rollout of the Suicide Crisis Assessment Nurse (SCAN) service in primary care.

Mental healthcare in Emergency Departments

Hospital Emergency Departments' prioritise and treat the most unwell patients and those with life-threatening illnesses first. Some patients who present to an ED may be known by Community Mental Health Services already and there may be enhanced co-ordination and care planning between ED staff and both inpatient and outpatient mental health services as required.

National Clinical Programme for Self Harm and Suicide Related Ideation

The National Clinical Programme for Self Harm and Suicide Related Ideation (NCPSHI) aims to standardise and improve the care of individuals presenting with self-harm in emergency settings. It emphasises timely, skilled assessments and the development of emergency care plans in collaboration with patients and their families.

For people presenting at an ED when in crisis following self-harm or with suicidal ideation, all such presentations follow the emergency care pathway, which includes the following steps:

- Patient triage (nurse assessment using standardised tools that determine the clinical priority of the person according to the severity of their presentation)
- Emergency medicine clinician assessment (emergency medicine doctor or nurse practitioner)
- Investigations (tests)
- Treatment
- Referral to appropriate speciality e.g. liaison mental health services for further speciality assessment
- Decision to admit or discharge the person with appropriate follow up (hospital or community mental health services).

The NCPSHI was first introduced in 2014 with a focus on self-harm in the Emergency Department. It was revised in 2022 to extend into the community and provide more detailed pathways of care in different clinical situations. It is currently implemented in 26 ED's with 24-hour service including the Children's Hospital Ireland (Tallaght) and planning is underway to ensure full national coverage. This Model of Care outlines in detail the response for people who present to the ED including services for children and adolescents with self-harm and suicide related ideation. To date the programme has funded 48.5 Clinical Nurse Specialist (CNS) posts.

The NCPSHI aims to ensure that all patients who present to the ED following self-harm or with suicidal ideation will receive a prompt biopsychosocial assessment, their family/supporters will receive support and advice on suicide prevention, the patient will be linked with the most appropriate care provider, and both the patient and their general practitioner will receive a written plan of care.

Patients are referred to the NCPSHI following medical triage and assessment within the ED. As per international best practice, the NCPSHI and Emergency Medicines Programme (EMP) promote the use of parallel assessments, whereby a mental health professional can work alongside ED staff or medical staff in meeting patients' needs. A comprehensive biopsychosocial assessment is completed by Clinical Nurse Specialists (CNS's), other equally qualified mental health professionals and Non-Consultant Hospital Doctors (NCHD's), all of whom receive clinical guidance and supervision from Consultant Psychiatrists.

An emergency safety plan is developed in collaboration with the patient and supportive adult. The patient is bridged to their next appropriate care appointment and a follow up telephone contact is made to the patient within 24 hours.

For patients with both physical and mental health needs, the NCPSHI and EMP promote the use of parallel assessments. Support is also provided in general hospital settings through liaison mental health services.

The HSE recognises the need for an appropriate space for mental health assessments within Emergency Departments that meet the privacy, dignity and safety needs for those with acute mental health presentations. The HSE is also reviewing the appropriateness of the ED for mental health service users and is exploring the development of assessment suites within future designed approved centres.

Liaison mental health services

Liaison mental health services (LMHS) provide a specialist service for individuals attending EDs in a crisis and are available to all age groups. LMHS manage ED presentations, which occur in areas overlapping mental and physical healthcare.

The new National Model of Care (MoC) for Consultation Liaison Psychiatry, was launched by Minister Butler in May 2025 to guide the future development of Liaison Mental Health services in hospitals. The MoC was developed by the HSE in collaboration with the Faculty of Liaison Psychiatry, and the College of Psychiatry of Ireland. The development of MoC was guided by Recommendation 60 of Sharing the Vision (2020) “continued expansion of Liaison Mental Health Services for all age groups should take place in the context of an integrated Liaison Mental Health MoC”. The MoC is a key part of the HSE’s drive to improve the ED experience for those presenting with a mental health crisis. Implementation of the MoC will require additional staffing resources, which will be progressed through the national estimates process and rolled out incrementally.
